Financing joint measures across sectors for resilience at transboundary basin scale: towards more cooperative and impactful climate action

Transboundary cooperation makes climate action more effective by reducing uncertainties through data exchange and enlarging planning space. More investment is needed for cross-sectoral, water-wise adaptation and climate smart transition. The event discusses how water cooperation enables coordinated action and resource mobilization through regional and basin organizations' partnerships. Financing for regional projects from climate and development funds brings climate-resilience with co-benefits.
